Lawsuit

Disability Rights Iowa (DRI), Iowa's Protection and Advocacy organization, filed suit in November, 2017, joined by the national law firms of Ropes & Gray out of Chicago and Children's Rights out of New York City. The litigation seeks injunctive relief (policy changes) in the adoption of two sets of rigorous national standards, eliminating the use of the restraint bed known as the wrap, reduction in the use of seclusion, and increase in the provision of mental health services. The matter was tried to Judge Stephanie Rose in the Southern District of Iowa June 6-18, 2019. The court order was delivered on March 30, 2020. A remedial plan (corrective action plan) was approved on July 27, 2020. The facility has worked on remedial plan tasks based on established timelines for past 8 months with the court appointed monitor submitting her first report in February 2020. The court appointed monitor visited on-site for the first time from March 23-25, 2020.

Iowa Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA)

OSHA cited BSTS on May 24, 2018, for a deficiency under the general duty to maintain a safe work environment based on a severe student on staff assault. With a single unprovoked and unanticipated punch, a student fractured staff's facial bones, leaving staff with permanent injuries. OSHA's position would advocate for an increase in use of restraints and SWAT type equipment to keep staff safe and issued what had to be fixed on August 28, 2018. This was resolved on March 14, 2019, with Iowa OSHA.
